Dear Harold,

I just wanted to drop you a note to let you know I am once-again a member of the "working class." I got the job in Harrisburg & will be starting July 1. I'm really excited because it has some fantastic possibilities. One of the benefits I'll be getting is a full tuition reimbursement - so as soon as I get settled into the job & my apartment, I'm going to look into a part-time law program. I would have rather attended law school full-time, but with tuition costs & all the student loans I already have, I don't see how I could have managed it anytime soon. Going part-time may take an extra year, but at least this way my tuition will be covered & I'll be getting some valuable professional experience at the same time. By the time I'd finish law school, I'll already have about 5 years in with the state, so my job prospects will be even better then.

I must admit, I'm not too happy about moving away from my family & friends, but I think I really need the change. Also, Alex will be moving to Florida in September to get his LL.M. & to work for a C.P.A. firm, so I'm concerned that our relationship may not survive, at least not as strong as it is now. Both of our careers are taking us separate ways, so I'm not sure how we'll work things out. Only time will tell.

I hate to end on an unhappy note, but I thought you'd want to know that Mary lost her baby a couple of weeks ago. We all went through several days of depression, but she's doing fine now & she and Gary are going to keep trying.

I'll be moving sometime in the next few weeks, so as soon as I get organized, I'll let you know what my new address is.

Take care — hi to Lil.

Best,
Karen
